To Mary A. Estlin

Mrs. Seaton's, Earl St., Maidenstone. The writer replies to the addressee's letter and refers to the truth of her remarks about religious differences. With regard to Mr. Seaton, the writer has not many fears on this account, as they agree on principles of action. Hopes the addressee will soon see the writer's "cher ami," who will accompany her to Bristol in about a fortnight. The writer spent a week at Tonbridge Castle, which did her much good. Declares that because she has a new object of interest, the addressee and her other friends are no less dear to her.

To "My dear Friend" «Mrs.Maria(Weston)Chapman»

«Athole Place, Higher Broughton, Manchester, Engl.» Within the last few months they have formed a small anti-slavery society in Manchester, the "first fruits" of which will be sent to the Bazaar by the Britannia. The writer hopes they will do better another year when the depression will be felt less. Describes the membership of the society. "Our members are not well informed on the bearings of the question." Some of them speak depreciatingly of "Garrison's strong language" and would like to send a remonstrance, but have agreed to refrain from doing so. In half an hour the writer is going to hear Emerson. Having heard Carlyle, the writer expects "to be able to hear Emerson wit[illegible]titude especially as he is more seraphic & calmer than [illegible] English 'strong spirit'." Since the writer wrote last, she has got "a little darling child."

"And now we have seen and heard the calm, dignified, gentle spirited happy minded High Priest of Transcendentalism. He has pleased us even to delight by his Music & Poetry of Voice & Thought, but he has not electrified us - his Lecture«s» are an intellectual treat but scarcely a spiritual solace..." Describes Emerson's visit at the writer's fireside. "He speaks well & justly & in high terms of the Abolitionists but by no means seeks the subject of antislavery & seems to regard the work as out of hi[illegible]phere." The writer hopes to see more of Emerson, for she fe[illegible]high regard & esteem & reverence for him."

«Newcastle on Tyne, (Eng.)» The writer would like to have sent a better contribution, but "writing for pretty books" has always been out of her line. "I have wished my venerable father in law (George Richardson) to write his autograph as that of an old and long tried friend of the negro," but because of his dislike of publicity, he would not do so. Mentions the young author of a poem, The Slave's Appeal.

Bathurst, Henry, 1744-1837; bishop of Norwich. Ch H 3.12

To the Reverend Dr. Henley, East-India College, Hartford.

[Norwich.] The mercenary and infamous conduct of his secretary, Mr. Wright, is a cause of much vexation. Fears that Henley will be one of the sufferers from the evil which threatens so many of his friends. Must blame Wright also for negligence in the matter of the renewal of Henley's license. Mr. Thitson (?) has written to him about it.

To Henry Grafton Chapman

«Norwich, England» The writer "would as soon go among the Southern slave holders to solicit aid, as among the abolitionists of Great Britain." Says J. G. Birney, H. B. Stanton and others prejudice the minds of the leading English Abolitionists so that "we are shunned by them as we should be ... by the rankest pro-slavery men of our own country." The writer has received from Elizabeth Pease extracts from letters written to one or more British abolitionists, one of these extracts having been taken from a letter by N. Colver. The writer copies these extracts, which are derogatory to Garrison, and throw suspicion on Collins. T[illegible] writer suggests to the addressee that he "let Colver re[illegible]se extracts in the Liberator" and that he send letters to prominent British Abolition-
